The iExit app will tell you exactly what lies ahead.

Available for $1.99 on Apple products and free on Android.

Roadside America

Make sure you don't miss out on a slice of Americana pie by mapping out all the off-beat tourist traps on your route. Let's face it, you'd be devastated if you discovered you had passed right by the world's largest garden gnome.

Available on Apple products. $2.99 for permanent access to one region, $1.99 for temporary access to one region, $5.99 for all regions.

Audible

Sometimes the best way to pass the time or enhance the experience is with a good audiobook. And as much fun as it can be to comb the truck-stop racks for the most ridiculous science fiction book on tape you can find, you'd probably prefer to catch up on your reading list.

Available for free on Apple products and Android. Most audiobooks cost between $20 and $30 unless you purchase an AudibleListener Gold Membership.

PACK THAT APP UP

CNN

Spring breaks are starting up across the country, which means it's the beginning of road trip season.

In "Travels with Charley: In Search of America," one of literature's most famous road trips, John Steinbeck wrote, "We find after years of struggle that we do not take a trip; a trip takes us."

Spotify

No need to burn dozens of CDs or deliberate over the perfect iPod playlist. With Spotify, you have an infinite jukebox at your fingertips. You can search as you go, make playlists beforehand or snag other Spotify members' playlists. In order to listen to Spotify on your iPhone, you have to pay a monthly fee. But remember, that means never buying or pirating an album again.

Available on Apple products and Android. The app is free but the premium service costs $9.99 per month.

GasBuddy

Today it would probably cost you between $300 and $600 to drive from Chicago to L.A. on Route 66. You can shoot for the lower end of that range by using this app to seek out the cheapest gas once the fuel gauge needle starts getting cozy with the E.

Available free on Apple products and Android.

License Plate Travel Game

A part of the exhilaration of road trips is reliving the family vacation experience, minus the family (if possible). Nothing takes you back to your childhood in the back-seat quite like road games. With this app, you can play continuously throughout your trip as the app logs all your finds and keeps score—one point for plates already found and two for new plates.

Available for 99 cents on Apple products and free on Android.

In the spirit of Steinbeck's philosophy on travel, we encourage you to take a road trip with no planning whatsoever, so that the journey can unfold without the interference of plans or expectation. Here are a few apps you can download on your phone that will allow you to go on a trip at a moment's notice, with nothing more than a bag of clothes, a full tank of gas and a healthy dose of wanderlust.

You (still) can't say that on TV?

Stephen Markley

redeye@tribune.com

It should come as no surprise that as a happy proponent of vulgarity, I don't think there's much point in TV, radio, newspapers and other media censoring language.

Let's focus on a specific case: the word to which my parents referred when I was very young as "the S-H word," always warning me not to say it before promptly applying it in all manner of situations, from describing the head of my mother's boss to my father's reaction when I yanked the banister out of the wall while playing "Back to the Future."

This specific word has gained a measure of mainstream respect lately, all but working itself into the title of William Shatner sitcoms and Internet memes that media must then report on as "Stuff White Girls Say." (Spoiler alert: It's mostly about "The Bachelor" and/or pretending to not know about "The Bachelor.")

This begs the question of why we still purport to call this a "bad" word. First of all, vulgarity is good for art. It's good for creativity. The poet Carl Sandburg once said that slang is "a language that rolls up its sleeves, spits on its hands and goes to work." Therefore, it's bizarre that the collective wisdom of mainstream media still believes that if you bleep a word or use an absurd "#$%!" stand-in, somehow that raises the discourse rather than making everyone feel silly.

Secondly, language has only the power with which we imbue it. A century ago, religious blasphemy and words such as "damn" were considered the height of profanity, but obviously we barely register those examples consciously today. In 100 years I find it unlikely anyone will think twice about this word, and people's agitation will arise from some as-yet-unknown slur, which future namby-pambys will deem vulgar—perhaps even "namby-pamby."

Take the example of presidential candidate Rick Santorum, whose name—thank you, Dan Savage—will continue to hold its lunch-losing definition long after he vanishes from the national scene. There is no reason to fear the word "plonder" right now, but if I were to launch an intensive campaign to define "plonder" as a "monkey placenta one hollows out to lose his virginity to," you can bet the Tribune Company and its affiliated papers would no longer be able to include it in print.

We descriptivists understand that language is fluid and that even the worst of today's vulgarity could turn up as tomorrow's "Gee willikers, fellas, this rhubarb ain't even ripe yet!" (For some reason, all my fantasies of the future involve gangs of "fellas" picking rhubarb.)

Finally and most importantly, I've always found it totally counterintuitive that we hardly blink an eye at all kinds of societal vulgarity yet are so firmly wedded to our outdated ideas of supposed indecency. God forbid a kid sees a boob on TV or hears a slang description of feces while political leaders lie us into multibillion-dollar wars, financiers set the economy ablaze, fossil fuel industries fund anti-scientific propaganda campaigns while the world burns, and cults of old white men tell women what they can't do with their reproductive organs.

These are perfect examples of society's actual vulgarity, and frankly, all of those namby-pambys—they can eat my plonder.

LETTER OF THE LAW

HATE CRIMES UNDER THE MICROSCOPE IN CHICAGO

By Leonor Vivanco | REDEYE

"What, are you gay cruising a straight neighborhood?"

That's what the victim heard, according to a police report, before he was attacked just steps away from the intersection of Halsted Street and Belmont Avenue—the hub of Boystown. The assailant punched him several times—three times to the face—and knocked him to the ground, hitting him again before he fled to the street.

"You're not going to look so pretty tomorrow," the assailant said as the victim ran off, according to the report.

That attack in the 700 block of West Briar Place one Sunday in March 2011 resulted in no arrest and was just one of the several hate crimes logged in Chicago throughout 2011. The number of reported hate crimes investigated by Chicago police increased slightly last year as city officials, lawmakers and community organizations continued work locally and nationwide to combat these offenses.

The issue has been thrust back into the spotlight recently. In January, three white teenagers were charged with hate crimes after they allegedly put a noose around a black teen's neck and threatened him in Beverly. Meanwhile, the "It Gets Better" project to prevent bullying of gay youth gained momentum in its second year, and Arkansas saw the nation's first conviction under the recently passed Matthew Shepard and James Byrd Jr. Hate Crimes Prevention Act.

In Chicago, 51 incidents—five more than in 2010—were reported to police last year as having a possible hate motivation, according to information provided by the Chicago Commission on Human Relations, which assists hate crime victims. Chicago police investigated those incidents and determined that 10 were "bona fide," meaning a criminal act was committed and the motive is believed to be based on an actual or perceived specific characteristic of the victim such as race or sexual orientation. The police classified the remaining incidents as either "unfounded" in which the hate motive was ruled out, or "undetermined" because of insufficient evidence to verify the incident was a hate crime.

Chicago police found no trends explaining the bump in reported incidents but noted community organizations can play a role in increasing awareness and reporting.

WHAT IS A HATE CRIME?

State law makes it a felony to commit a hate crime. It's defined as an assault, battery, aggravated assault, misdemeanor theft or criminal damage to property, criminal trespass to residence or to vehicle or real property, mob action, disorderly conduct or harassment by electronic communication motivated by actual or perceived race, color, creed, religion, ancestry, sexual orientation, gender, physical or mental disability or national origin of a person or group of people.

"Although the number of hate crimes is not significantly high in Chicago, the effects can reverberate through a community," Chicago police spokeswoman Lt. Maureen Biggane said in an email.

The tally of 10 bona fide hate crimes was sent to the Illinois State Police, who forwarded the data to the FBI for its annual hate crime statistics report. In addition, the Cook County State's Attorney's Office filed a hate crime charge in another case, bringing the 2011 Chicago tally to 11.

For the past few years, sexual orientation has been among the top biases cited in reported hate crimes in Chicago. Nationally, people in the LGBT community are more likely to be hate crime victims than any other minority group, based on an analysis by the Southern Poverty Law Center, a nonprofit civil rights organization based in Alabama.

Nationally, there were 6,628 hate crime incidents reported to the FBI in 2010, the most recent data available.

But the numbers aren't comprehensive and can be misleading, said Mark Potok, senior fellow at the Southern Poverty Law Center. Some local and state law enforcement agencies don't report hate crime stats to the FBI, and hate crimes may not be categorized as such even when reported to local authorities, he said.

"Hate crimes are probably the most under-reported crime in America," Potok said, noting that a 2005 Bureau of Justice Statistics special report found that 55 percent of hate crimes nationwide are not reported to police.

For example, the state hate crime law takes what could be a simple battery, which is a misdemeanor, and elevates the crime to a felony offense if there's evidence that shows it was motivated by hate, said Dan Kirk, chief of staff for the Cook County state's attorney's office.

The office looks for evidence such as derogatory language or slurs said before the crime is committed or after the fact.

"The theory behind hate crime prosecution is there's two victims: the victim in the case and we view the community they come from as a victim as well," Kirk said. "These crimes are particularly egregious because they end up promoting fear in an entire community."

BY THE NUMBERS

The number of hate crimes reported in Chicago and nationwide spiked in 2001, the year of the 9/11 terrorist attacks in New York. That year saw 215 reported in Chicago, with about half classified as bona fide by police. In the past five years, however, the number of bona fide hate crimes—which Chicago police determined to have been motivated by certain demographics of the victim, such as race or religion—has declined. # TWO TEENS CHARGED IN NYE RAPE

Chicago Tribune

Two teenagers were charged Tuesday with sexually assaulting a young Highland Park woman after she became separated from friends outside a Northwest Side theater on New Year's Eve and wandered drunk into a taco restaurant across the street.

Terrance Ford, 15, and Aanwar Barbour, 16, were charged as adults with aggravated criminal sexual assault, kidnapping and robbery and were ordered held on $750,000 bail each by Cook County Judge Ed Harmening. An arrest warrant has been issued for a third suspect, a police source said.

Ford, a sophomore at Foreman High School, bowed his head in court while still wearing the Homer Simpson pajama bottoms and T-shirt he had on when he was arrested Monday morning. He works part-time selling subscriptions to the Tribune over the phone, his court-appointed attorney said.

Barbour attends Oak Park-River Forest High School and earns B's and C's, his lawyer, Steven Pick, said.

Barbour and Ford have previous juvenile records for minor offenses, prosecutors said.

The 18-year-old victim came to the city with friends for a concert at the Congress Theater in Logan Square, prosecutors said.

After she was separated from her friends, she went into a restaurant across the street, where she fell down and sat against a wall.

Ford and Barbour saw that the woman was drunk and brought her to their table, where they were joined by six other people, Assistant State's Attorney Sean O'Callaghan said. A short time later, video surveillance captured them leading the victim out. Ford had told the others he planned to rob the woman and have sex with her, the prosecutor said.

The two brought the woman down a side street and went through her purse before carrying her to a grass parkway in the 2100 block of North Rockwell, where Ford sexually assaulted her, the charges alleged.

Witnesses told police they saw several individuals standing in a semicircle around Ford and the victim. Ford and Barbour were arrested near the scene, but both later were released, prosecutors said. According to an arrest report, they stole $70 to $90 in cash and two rings from the victim.

Multiple witnesses identified Ford and Barbour in police lineups, and DNA from blood found on Ford's boxer shorts was matched to the victim, O'Callaghan said.

Steven Pick, Barbour's attorney, said after court that there was no DNA evidence linking Barbour to the crime and that his client did not make any statements admitting his involvement.

While the victim's family declined interviews Tuesday, her father said after the assault that his daughter was recovering and expressed gratitude for the community's support.

M-Rahm ready to roll on bike sharing

Chicago Tribune

The Emanuel administration has selected an Oregon-based company with operations in the U.S. and overseas to operate Chicago's first large-scale bicycle-sharing rental program starting this summer.

Alta Bicycle Share, Inc., of Portland, Ore., and its equipment manufacturer, Public Bike System Co., were chosen over two competing bids to make 3,000 bicycles available at 300 solar-powered self-service pick-up and drop-off locations this summer. The program will be expanded to 5,000 bikes and 500 docking stations by 2014, officials have said.

City Hall estimates the total capital and start-up costs at $21 million, adding that $18 million will be covered by federal funding aimed at improving air quality and easing traffic congestion. The remaining $3 million will be provided by the city.

Operating costs of the bike-sharing program are expected to be paid for entirely by membership and user fees, advertising and sponsorships, with no additional cost to city taxpayers, mayoral spokesman Tom Alexander said.

HOW IT WORKS

The bike-sharing program would operate like car-sharing programs, officials have said. Program participants would pay an annual membership fee and pay no additional costs to check out bicycles for the first half hour, officials said. Visitors to the city and other one-time users could buy daily or weekly memberships. The bikes will feature multiple speeds, chain guards, fenders on both wheels, a cushioned seat and a basket, officials said.

The city received a $4 million federal grant in December to launch the bike-sharing program as a way to reduce congestion and increase options for commuters who use public transit during part of their trips. That money will be used in the second phase of the project, Alexander said.

Mayor Emanuel is set to introduce an ordinance at Wednesday's City Council meeting seeking approval to enter into an agreement with Alta Bicycle Share, officials said.

Is work making you fat?

Women who are fed up with their jobs may be more likely to turn to food for comfort in times of stress, according to a Finnish study.

The study, reported in the American Journal of Clinical Nutrition, found that those who reported work burnout also were more likely to have a habit of "emotional" eating, or eating when stressed, anxious or down, rather than just hungry.

What's more, they were more prone to "uncontrolled" eating—the feeling that you're always hungry or can't stop eating until all the food's gone.

"Those experiencing burnout may be more vulnerable to emotional eating and uncontrolled eating and have a hindered ability to make changes in their eating behavior," wrote

Nina Nevanpera of the Finnish Institute of Occupational Health, who led the eating study.

"We recommend that burnout should be treated first and that burnout and eating behavior should be evaluated in obesity treatment."

The findings are based on 230 women ages 30 to 55 who were part of a clinical trial looking at healthy lifestyle changes. All were employed, and at the start of the trial they completed surveys on job burnout and eating habits.

Overall, 22 percent of the women had some degree of work burnout. As a group, they scored higher on measures of emotional eating and uncontrolled eating.

WHY WE EAT

"Work permeates our lives," said Sherry Pagoto, an associate professor of medicine at the University of Massachusetts Medical School and a clinician at the university's Weight Center. "People may be in a job where they're unhappy, or a marriage where they're unhappy, and eating can become one of the few pleasures in their lives."

On top of that, women who did not have job burnout at the study's onset tended to cut down on uncontrolled eating over one year. But, on average, the burnout group failed to make that change.

Obama: Justice for slain Afghan citizens

7 WASHINGTON President Obama promised Tuesday that a U.S. soldier's shooting rampage in Afghanistan would be investigated as if the dead were "our own citizens and our own children," and pledged a responsible end to the war in the country.

The White House said it was not reviewing options to speed up troop withdrawals from Afghanistan after the shooting and that a decision on troop numbers was not expected before a NATO summit in Chicago on May 20-21.

An unnamed U.S. soldier is accused of walking off his base in Afghanistan's Kandahar province early Sunday and killing at least 16 villagers, mostly women and children.

The incident has added to strain between the U.S. and Afghanistan when they have been trying to agree to a pact that would allow U.S. advisers and special forces to stay in Afghanistan after combat troops leave at the end of 2014.

BULLS VS. MIAMI

HEATED RIVALRY

BULLS' MATCHUPS WITH MIAMI RECALL 1990S BATTLES WITH DETROIT

By Bryan Crawford

FOR REDEYE

The pain is still fresh for Bulls fans and players.

When the Bulls were eliminated in the Eastern Conference finals at the hands of the Miami Heat in May, Chicago's effort to end a 13-year NBA championship drought was put on hold yet again. The Bulls fielded the best team they've had since the days of Michael Jordan and Scottie Pippen, and it seemed as if that title was well within the Windy City's grasp.

But Miami changed all that.

The script is playing out much the same way this season. The Bulls and Heat again are two of the best teams in the NBA, and if they continue on their expected paths, they will do battle in the playoffs again—and for years to come.

The scenario is setting up the Bulls-Heat rivalry much like the Bulls-Detroit Pistons rivalry of the 1990s—but not as heated, yet.

Bulls TV announcer Stacey King took part in those legendary battles with the "Bad Boys" of Detroit.

"You don't see too many rivalries that marvel that type of rivalry anymore. The league has kind of gotten away from that," said King, who played for the Bulls from 1989-94. "You're talking about two teams that really didn't like each other. We genuinely disliked Detroit, they genuinely disliked us, the cities disliked each other. So it ran a lot deeper than basketball. But with this team and Miami, there's no hatred."

Veteran Bulls reporter and current bulls.com writer Sam Smith has seen both rivalries up close and said they are not the same.

"There was a genuine dislike between Chicago and Detroit that doesn't exist in the NBA pretty much anymore because of all the postgame shaking hands and hugging and all that stuff. There was no hugging between those teams," Smith said. "When the Pistons won [an NBA championship] first and the Bulls aimed at them, there was this lingering dislike and rivalry that doesn't really exist toward Miami."

“The one thing all of us understand is that Miami isn't going anywhere.”

—John Paxson, former Bulls guard

Of course, beating each other up year after year could change all of that, and if it does, would that kind of intensity be bad for the NBA? Bulls vice president of basketball operations John Paxson, another member of those Bulls teams that faced off with the Pistons, doesn't think so.

"Back when we were battling Detroit, that was the team we had to get over, and that rivalry was born out of a number of years," said Paxson, a Bulls guard from 1985-94. "Our rivalry with the Heat is just beginning ... but it's good and it's healthy. When we were trying to get past the Pistons, it was healthy for the league, and I think it's good for the league now too."

"The one thing all of us understand is that Miami isn't going anywhere. They've got LeBron James, Dwyane Wade and Chris Bosh. ... We have to prove year in and year out that we can compete, and that's what we're trying to do."

Wade, much like Detroit's Isiah Thomas before him, is a local guy whose team is standing in the way of his hometown's title chances. It's an interesting dynamic, but there seem to be subtle differences there too.

"On some levels it's similar," Smith said. "[Wade] won when he had Shaq, but now he has a new team, and with his new team he hasn't quite succeeded yet. So I don't think these Bulls look at Wade as being on a pedestal and you have to shoot at him; I think they look at him more like an equal because he achieved when he won a title with Shaq, but he hasn't achieved otherwise."

King considers Wade only a part-time villain to the current Bulls.

"Isiah was born and raised here, but his actions in Detroit really made him a villain," King said. "Dwyane Wade is not that type of player. He's a great player that doesn't badmouth the hometown team, and even though he plays in Miami and the fans don't like him when we play Miami [in Chicago], he can come back home and there's a mutual respect."

Paxson, however, does see the similarity between Wade and Thomas.

"That's a good way to look at it," he said. "I think it makes for an interesting storyline because Isiah had our number for a while."

But there's one thing Paxson sees that should get Bulls fans excited.

"Michael was motivated to beat [Isiah Thomas] and the Pistons, and ultimately it worked out for us," Paxson said. "Derrick [Rose] is still a young player, but he's hungry. So I know that he's going to do everything that he possibly can to put us in a position to win [a championship]."

Deng likely, Rose out?

Luol Deng participated fully in Tuesday's practice and, barring a setback at Wednesday's shoot-around, will return to face Miami after missing two games to rest his ailing left wrist. Derrick Rose, however, sat with what sources said is soreness in the groin area that needed an MRI exam Tuesday and could sideline him Wednesday.

"I want to see how he feels after practicing, but he went through everything and felt pretty good," coach Tom Thibodeau said.

Deng, who tore a ligament Jan. 21 and opted against surgery, sat after logging close to 85 minutes in last week's back-to-back games at Milwaukee and against Orlando. The Bulls have five more sets of back-to-back games, and sources said management has talked about limiting his workload in those situations.

Wrestling disses its women

As a fan of professional wrestling, I often imagine what the WWE would look like today if the male Superstars were promoted the same way as the female Divas.

Elliott Serrano

» @geektome

If you follow the current storylines in the top-rated "RAW" and "Smackdown" series, there is a significant difference in how the two sexes are portrayed.

Consider this: Current WWE champion—and Chicago native—CM Punk is a tough-as-nails straight shooter who is one of the most popular wrestlers in the industry. He plays the part of an anti-establishment hero who thumbs his nose at authority. (This formula is what made "Stone Cold" Steve Austin so popular in the 1990s.)

On the other side of the glass ceiling you have WWE "Diva" Natalya Neidhart, the first female "third generation" wrestler with a pedigree that reaches back to the legendary Hart dynasty. She's a former women's champion and formidable athlete ... with a flatulence problem.

Seriously, she once lost a match because she passed gas while applying her finishing move—"the Sharpshooter"—which she inherited from WWE Hall of Famer Bret "The Hitman" Hart. To have it nullified by something so ludicrous was disrespectful, not only to Neidhart but also to the Hart legacy.

What I don't understand is why the WWE, a company so progressive with its branding and social media strategies, finds it so difficult to develop its female wrestlers so they are more than just pin-up models or the butt (no pun intended) of bad jokes.

Does the WWE really believe the idea of a tough female competitor is too much for modern wrestling audiences to accept? The success of action films starring women (i.e. "Underworld," "Resident Evil," "Haywire") would say otherwise.

Going back to my original question, how many T-shirts do you think the WWE would have sold if Stone Cold Steve Austin were saddled with the same gimmick? Would he have become the top Superstar of the 1990s if his catchphrase had been "Austin 3:16 means I just passed gas"?

Yeah, that's what I thought.

1 Make a prediction about Wednesday night's Bulls-Heat game.	As on "The Bachelor," a Rose is better than a threesome.	Wade goes off, Rose responds, and Bulls win off a last-min rally.	Unlike ABC's "The Bachelor," all the ladies on the Heat will get a Rose.	LeBron will mug. Wade will smile. Rose will dominate. Bulls will win.	Carlos Boozer will put forth all his effort on D this time. Maybe even jump.
2 The Bulls-Heat rivalry is like ...	... a reminder that not only Kourtney and Khloe can take Miami.	... the Bulls-Pistons rivalry. (Hear me out.) The Bulls don't have the last piece yet.	... John Cena and the Rock at WrestleMania!	... almost as crazy as Aussie Football's Carlton-Collingwood rival. Now that's pure insanity!	... the one-sided "war" that will be the robotic overthrow of mankind! BWAHAHAHAHAHA!
3 What kind of chants will United Center fans have for Miami?	No need to bash since they've got Bosh. U-G ...	"Bleeeeeeeeeeeeeep!"	Let's just say with all our chants, the Heat won't have a chance.	Just vulgar enough to keep things interesting.	[Bleep], [bleep], [bleepity, bleep bleep]. Oh, sorry, I was just powering up.
4 How did you celebrate the Blackhawks signing Daniel Carcillo for two more seasons?	Not with Daniel Carcillo.	I'm starting a fight with the next person I see! Oh, and boozing.	Knee surgery. Sorry, I hurt myself after taking that cheap shot at Carcillo.	Dreamed about Carcillo getting back on the ice and immediately roughing up the creepy Sedin twins.	I flashed his iPhone.
5 Jake Peavy looks shaky in spring training. Any reason for concern?	We can all hope for some flies with that shake.	He's been pitching with one arm for five years at this point, so why worry now?	Shaky has always described his pitching mechanics. At least everything is still attached.	Yes! After all, a healthy and effective Jake Peavy is key to the White Sox's 65-win season.	Until his cyborg parts are completely installed, he'll never be the pitcher he once was.

WHAT A CATCH

BEARS TRADE FOR MIAMI WIDE RECEIVER BRANDON MARSHALL

RedEye

The Bears finally have that No. 1 wide receiver fans have been wanting for years. On Tuesday, the Bears traded two third-round draft picks for Brandon Marshall, quarterback Jay Cutler's former Denver Broncos teammate. The move was met with near unanimous cheers.

Marshall, 27, is 6-foot-4 and gives Cutler a big target and playmaker.

So why is Marshall such a big deal? Check him out compared with the Bears' top receivers.

Brandon Marshall

THE DIGIT

$2.8 MILLION

That's the amount Bulls guard Derrick Rose paid for his new three-bedroom condo in the Trump International Hotel and Tower.

Early NCAA bracket buster

If you've already filled out your NCAA Tournament bracket, you might want to tear it up and try again. Syracuse, many people's pick to reach the championship game, announced Tuesday that sophomore center Fab Melo has been ruled ineligible for the tournament.

'The Kid' set for another comeback

The daily Sidney Crosby updates, which have read "out" for months, suddenly screamed "in" on Tuesday. Crosby, who hasn't played for the Penguins since Dec. 5, is scheduled to hit the ice Thursday when Pittsburgh faces the N.Y. Rangers. "I feel good and the plan is to play Thursday," Crosby, 24, said after practice Tuesday. Welcome back—again.

More Bears moves

» In an effort to avoid last season's debacle at backup quarterback, the Bears signed Jason Campbell to be Jay Cutler's backup.

» The Bears got a head start on free agency Tuesday by snagging one of their own before he hit the market at 4 p.m., agreeing to terms on a two-year deal with cornerback Tim Jennings. "I'm happy. I'm satisfied," Jennings said.

» The Bears have set their sights on former Jaguar defensive end Jeremy Mincey and are moving to try to secure a deal. The 28-year-old had eight sacks and was productive against the run for the Jaguars last season.

Whiskey-powered roots-rock outfit Dastardly dares to embrace the focus of a variety show

CHI-TUNES

Andy Downing

» redeye@tribune.com

Roots-rock quintet Dastardly kicks like a dingy, unbroken mule on its latest EP, "Bury Me in the Country," a whiskey-fueled hootenanny that opens with the off-the-rails and appropriately titled "Freight Train"—and never lets up on the relentless pace.

Last fall, Dastardly staged an old-time variety show at the Hideout, inviting local comedians onstage to perform between songs. The "Grand Ole Opry" format proved to be a success, and the group has been asked to put on a handful of similarly minded shows each year, including its current one, dubbed "Megachurch." RedEye talked with frontman Gabe Liebowitz, 24, of Wicker Park, about "Megachurch," the new EP and being a double-decker bus tour guide.

Can you start by telling me about the variety show you guys are putting on at the Hideout?

I had this idea to do a variety show because we're friends with a lot of great comedians in town ... and I really liked the idea of combining the music scene and the comedy scene. We were actually playing a lot of variety shows, like "Entertaining Julia" at Town Hall Pub. With those shows, people were sitting down and paying attention and taking everything in. It was a lot different from shows in music venues where the etiquette is you drink and you talk loudly over the band.

I imagine people would have a hard time drowning you out these days. "Bury Me in the Country" is significantly rowdier than your debut.

Absolutely. We're super proud of the debut, but we'd only been together five or six months when we recorded it. The main critique we got ... was that it was good, but it didn't capture our live sound. So when we got back from a tour, we took a couple days off and went to the Rumble Arts Center to record. We brought a big ol' handle of whiskey, let the tapes roll and chose our five rowdiest songs.

Did you take your band name at least in part from Dick Dastardly?

[Laughs.] Not really. It was more the definition of Dastardly, which is "evil coward." That really appealed to me. The Dick Dastardly imagery definitely does appear—like the whole Snidely Whiplash, tied-down-to-the-railroad-tracks thing—in our videos and in the lyrical content.

Lyrically, it sounds like you're aiming to write songs that don't belong to a certain point in time.

I really spend a lot of time examining lyrics of traditional folk songs and Carter Family and old Delta blues recordings from the '20s and '30s because it's something so ancient and timeless that there's almost something holy about it. I've really tried to emulate that imagery ... and tried to get rid of any sense of time.

GABE LIEBOWITZ PERSONALITY TEST

What's the last album you bought?

Grimes, "Visions"

Song you've listened to on repeat recently?

"Monkberry Moon Delight" by Paul McCartney

Song you never want to hear again?

Let me cue this up because I just listened to it and I never want to hear it again. Steel Panther, "Death to All But Metal."

group called Sleepover from Austin. She does really creepy music that I'm surprised more people haven't caught up on.

Favorite movie ever?

That's probably "Hedwig and the Angry Inch."

Chicago's best music venue?

Right now I gotta go with Lincoln Hall. The sound is phenomenal, it's such a beautiful room and the staff is great.

New band you don't know personally that deserves to be big?

There's this

You worked as a double-decker bus tour guide for years. What was your favorite Chicago-related story to share with tourists?

Ohhh, I had so many cheesy jokes I loved telling. When we'd go by the Sears Tower back when it was still called the Sears Tower,

I would say, "The Sears Tower has 110 floors, 104 working elevators and only one bathroom."

What kind of response did you get?

Sometimes bewilderment and sometimes blank stares because they did not speak English.

I've read you're obsessed with the Muppets.
I am. You've done your homework.

Which Muppet do you identify most closely with?

Oh, wow. That's an incredible question. I've never really thought about that. I'd have to say Kermit, and I know it's an obvious, boring answer, but Kermit is the leader of a motley crew of zany people, and he's trying to do whatever he can to make everyone happy and make everything go OK.

Considering the variety show you guys are staging, I'm wondering if you've actually ever done any stand-up.

I have not.

Any plans to?

I really want to show up at a comedy open mic and sing "My Way" by Frank Sinatra, but be accompanied by a really crappy midi file and sing along to that the whole way through.

So when do you make your debut?

Oh man, I guess I'd have to be dared to do it. If you're officially daring me, I can make it happen.

Let's call it a dare then.

All right. I'll keep you updated on the premiere of "Man Sings 'My Way.'

music*CD REVIEW*Delta's spirit missing*By Emily Van Zandt

REDEYE SOUND BOARD

On its third full-length album, California indie rock band Delta Spirit sounds ... different. The group's old Americana twang has been shed in favor of a heavy dose of ambient guitar. I fell in love with the band's "Friday Night Lights"-approved track "Devil Knows Your Dead," and I just couldn't find a moment that equaled that on the new self-titled release. But it wasn't all bad. Follow along with my track-by-track breakdown.

"Empty House": Line I had to rewind for: "Copper pipe is worth more than you think." Real talk, guys. Copper theft is a big issue.

"Tear It Up": Oh, you're going to say "just tear it up" over and over? Skip.

"California": Delta Spirit used to have a lilting, stripped down, Fleet Fox-y thing going on. But this album is starting to feel like they hijacked a few new members from My Morning Jacket and Explosions in the Sky.

"Idaho": "Yeah we'll hang low/ Like they do it out in Idaho." Having never been to Idaho,

Delta Spirit
Delta Spirit

I cannot speak to the accuracy of these lyrics.

"Home": Dark, relatively stripped down. Matthew Vasquez's nasally vocals (think Bob Dylan) really shine here. I mean this as a compliment. Favorite track so far. Probably because it sounds like something off a "Friday Night Lights" episode.

"Otherside": I was fully expecting to ignore this track, but it has a fun, '60s rock vibe to it. Approved.

"Tellin' the Mind": What is this yelling and anger, boys? Where did this come from? Did you go through a delayed punk-appreciation phase?

"Time Bomb": Too distracted by "Grandpa reviews Delta Spirit" video on YouTube. He thought "California" was pretty good.

"Into the Darkness": Possible driving music for when you're headed to a chill drum circle sesh in like, Asheville, N.C.

"Money Saves": Second track I fully approve of. Loving the harmonies. Tolerating the ambient guitar builds.

"Yamaha": Once again we've gone garage rock. Whatever. I guess raging for a minute at a Delta Spirit show wouldn't be terrible.

Tripel Karmeliet

TRY IT

Chimay Tripel (White): An opaque apricot-colored beer with a bready, spicy aroma and a flavor that has lemon, coriander, honey and black pepper notes.

St. Bernardus Tripel: Hazy and amber with the smell of apricots and tropical fruits. The taste is complex, with caramel notes that meld with bright lemon and apricot flavors.

Tripel Karmeliet: Smelling of green apples, biscuits and spice, the pale amber beer's flavor hints at mangoes, lemons and cloves.

Westmalle Tripel: A pale orange beer, with a lemon, biscuit and apricot-tinged aroma and an elegant, complex flavor that brings to mind hay, honey, dried apricots and a bready, yeasty note.

Old-school Belgian beer stands test of time

Chicago Tribune

Mediocre beers occasionally garner hype from beer geeks who stand in line for hours, or scour eBay, to procure them for their cellars, but world-class beers don't always attract attention. Sometimes great beers don't get their due simply because they've been excellent for decades.

Take the tripel, a sweet, complex variety that originated in Belgium more than 75 years ago. If you popped open a bottle of Westmalle Tripel in 1956 and one today, you'd find nary a difference between them. Both beers would be golden yellow, with a lemon, biscuit and apricot-tinged aroma and an elegant, complex flavor that brings to mind hay, honey, dried apricots and a bready, yeasty note.

Virtually nothing has changed because, quite simply, the monks who produce the beer at the Trappist Abbey of Westmalle haven't needed to alter anything, says Philippe Van Assche, Westmalle's director. "We're very satisfied with what we have," he says.

Maintaining consistency has worked, because their beer is widely regarded as one of the world's great brews. In 1934, Westmalle created the strong, golden ale that later became known as tripel, and, in doing so, created the template for the style.

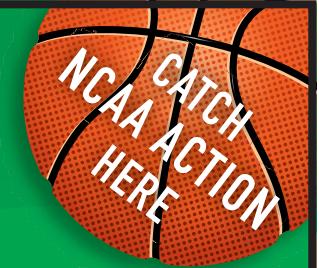

The beer's creation story is straightforward: Westmalle crafted the beer because it could. Belgium was in the midst of prohibition, which barred the production of spirits, but not beer. That meant brewers could garner the market share previously controlled by distillers by producing more alcoholic beers that could take the place of spirits, Van Assche says.

When the monks opened their new brewery, they decided to celebrate. They used roughly triple the amount of malted barley they added to their everyday ale to make a big beer, hence the name tripel. Westmalle's brewers tweaked the recipe for the next 22 years before settling on the current formula which is made only of water, malted barley, Belgian candy sugar, hops and yeast.

Although Westmalle set the standard, a slew of other breweries produce their own takes on the style.

BURGER REVIEW

Au Cheval

800 W. Randolph St.
312-929-4580

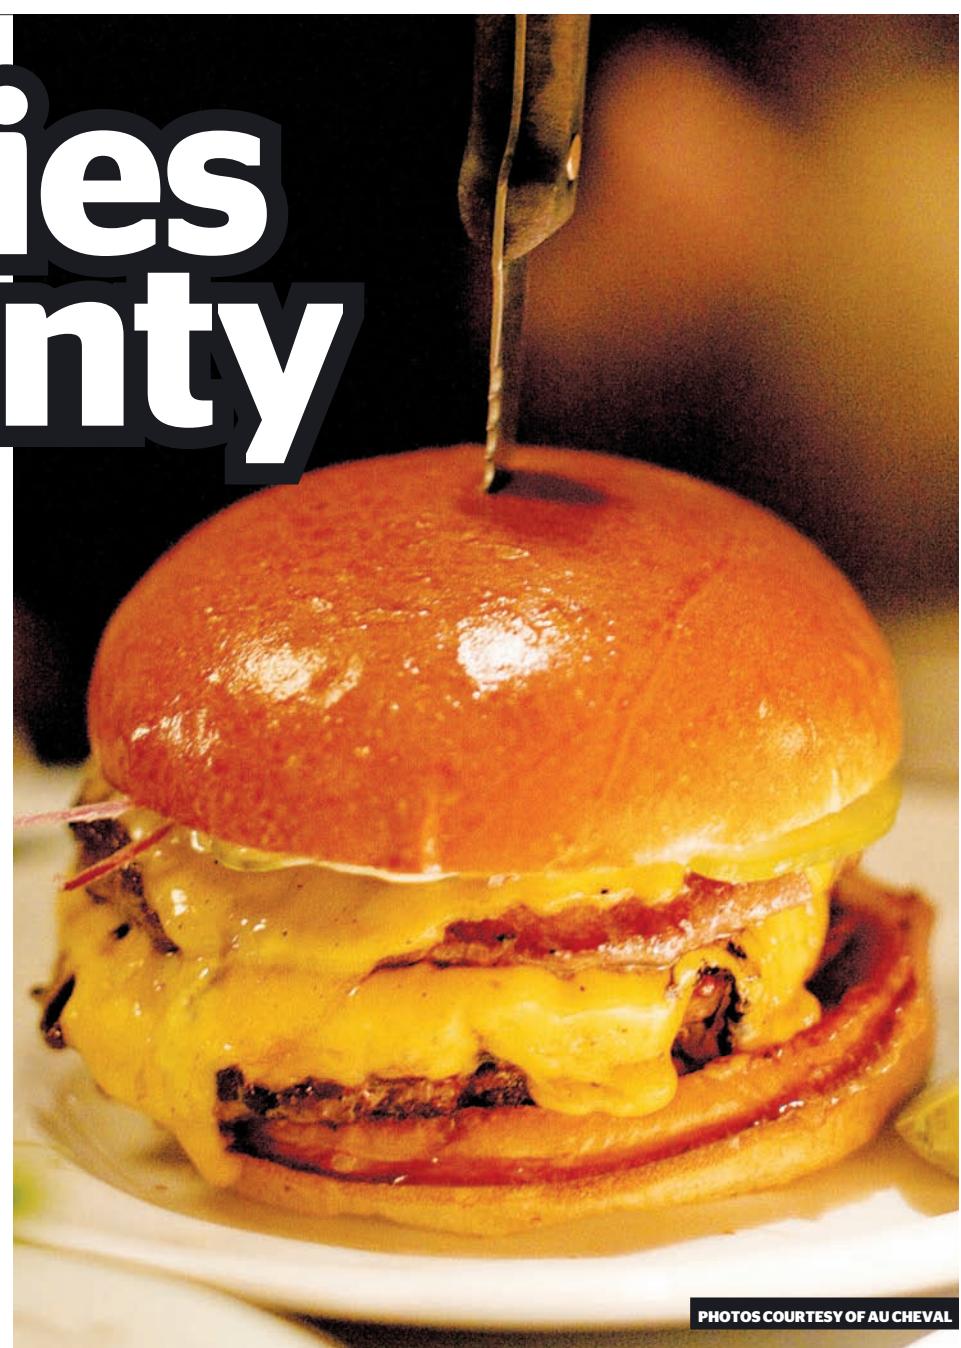

Cheval, a diner of sorts on Randolph Street from local restaurateur Brendan Sodikoff. While I found the tufted leather booths, dim lighting and lack of neon confusing at first, the presence of not one but two burgers on the menu quickly put me at ease.

The burger: What a pleasant surprise to find that my single cheeseburger ($9.95) arrived with two 6-ounce griddled patties, while the double cheeseburger ($11.95) arrived with three. I tip my hat to the chef for the extra beefiness, though I wish each moist patty had packed a bit more salt and seasoning. Pressed thin in the classic diner style, the patties retained an impressive juiciness even when cooked through.

The bun: The brioche bun is a weary warrior, fighting to stand up to the onslaught of juice produced by two or three patties. Eventually, though, both top and bottom buns abandon their heroic quest and beg me to go on eating the burger without their limp assistance.

The fixings: Melty cheddar and Dijon mayonnaise result in slippery, sloppy goodness. Pickles are abundant, with sweet bread-and-butter chips providing a slight crunch to the burger, while a spear on the side counters with some needed acidity. I did find myself pining for the crispness of a lettuce leaf.

Hailing from the land of culinary refinement that is New Jersey, the Great Burgerelli spent many formative burger-consuming years perched atop a diner stool. From this vantage point, I became an expert on the anatomy of a properly thin griddled burger, and also learned to appreciate my satisfied reflection in the gleam of a chrome jukebox. But there is neither chrome nor a Bruce Springsteen soundtrack at Au

Everything else: Crispy fries with aioli ($6.50) are, I am told, the same addictive variety as those at Sodikoff's other establishments, Maude's and Gilt Bar. Not realizing that pickles would arrive both on and beside my burger, I foolishly ordered a side of bread-and-butter pickles for $4. One would be better off putting those dollars toward the libational curiosity that is The Pickleback ($6.50), a shot of whiskey and pickle brine that made my mustache quiver, though pleasantly so.

Bottom line: To reinterpret a "diner" as a restaurant so stylish requires boldness on Au Cheval's part, but unfortunately, this vigor does not extend to the patty's flavor or the bun's fortitude. A price tag of close to $20 for a burger and fries is tougher to swallow than a too-thick milkshake.

Spreading worthwhile comedy

Parody show creators just hope they're funnier than they are smart

By Julia Borcherts

FOR REDEYE

Perhaps you're one of the millions who watched videos from TED Talks, the Silicon Valley super-conference where "ideas worth spreading" are disseminated by luminaries such as Al Gore, Steve Jobs and J.K. Rowling.

In response to these attempts to smarten us up, comedians Kellen Alexander, 27, and Seth Dodson, 29, joined forces in March 2011 to host "NEDTalks: Spreading Worthless Ideas," a TED Talks parody in which local comedians aim to dumb you down with speeches, pie charts and crayon drawings about ridiculous topics such as "How Skipping Breakfast Can Be Good for Hunger."

We checked in to find out more about their upcoming fifth NEDTalks mini-conference.

What's the inspiration behind these NEDTalks shows?

Kellen Alexander: We are stupid. The only thing we really know for sure is that we will never be smart. Since we'll never be able to give a TED Talk, we figured why not make up our own version where we can talk about what we are experts in: absolutely nothing.

What can people expect to see at NEDTalks?

KA: PowerPoint presentations that look like they were made by a third-grader in 1998.

Seth Dodson: Lectures and presentations on topics that range from idiotic to moronic, but will be funny.

In addition to comedians, you're bringing in an actual guest expert?

KA: Yes! We have Craig Hogan, the director of the Fermilab Center for Particle Astrophysics. He's an actual expert who is trying to prove that the 3-D universe in which we appear to live is [in fact] a hologram—which I think means we're living on a giant Pokemon card!

Where did you find him?

KA: I actually met him at a New Year's Eve party.

What are your own nerd credentials?

SD: I'm really into "Magic: The Gathering"—the fantasy trading-card game—and am trying to lead a revival of it by bringing my cards everywhere I go. So far, it isn't working.

KA: I did the three nerdiest activities at the country's nerdiest school: I played French horn, ran cross country and did improv comedy, all at the University of Chicago.

What's the worst conference you've ever attended?

SD: Probably one about theater in Texas while I was in college. When you combine big hair and Broadway, you can count on being bored!

KA: I think the only conference I've ever been to was a Youth Gathering for Lutherans. All I remember is that our church skipped out on participating in all of the service projects. I'm an atheist now.

You also perform separately and together in several comedy shows around town. Where do you go for inspiration?

SD: The Lucky Horseshoe, Bravo TV and the wig shop.

What's been the high point of your careers so far?

ZACH DODSON

Whose bubble will pop?

Ratings-challenged shows waiting for ax

MCT

Is it any wonder so many TV fans have a fear of commitment? You form a strong bond with a particular show and then ... poof, it goes AWOL.

This is the time of year when anxiety really sets in for some viewers. Networks are in the thick of their development season, shooting new drama and comedy pilots, and something has to give. To make room for the fresh inventory, certain ratings-challenged shows will get the boot. That means these shows, for now, find themselves precariously perched on the "bubble"—waiting to see if they'll live or die.

Of course, not all of them are worth fretting over. Take, for example, NBC's dreadful "Are You There Chelsea?" and Fox's "I Hate My Teenage Daughter." Buh-bye.

But a handful of good shows don't deserve to live in protracted fear of cancellation. With that in mind, here's a list of bubble shows I don't want to see go "pop."

Community NBC

When NBC left this college comedy off its midseason schedule, the show's small but fiercely loyal band of fans nearly staged a riot. And who can blame them? The world should not be deprived of Troy and Abed, or the rest of the kooky gang and all their pop-culture references and outlandish parodies. "Community" finally returns this week, and we can only hope that more viewers rally around the show.

Cougar Town ABC

We let out a big cheer when the wine-guzzling cul-de-sac crew recently returned from an excruciatingly long hiatus. But that joy was somewhat offset by the show's lackluster ratings. It's hard to figure out why more people aren't drawn to this hilarious Courteney Cox comedy, which features one of the best ensembles in prime time and has so many witty things to say about adult relationships.

Parenthood NBC

Like the late, great "Friday Night Lights," this show's writers and actors have an uncanny ability to touch nerves and pinpoint the emotional truths in everyday interactions. They know how to keep it real.

Alcatraz Fox

OK, so maybe this mystery-thriller from J.J. Abrams didn't quite capture the same island magic as "Lost." And maybe it leans a little too much toward crime-procedural formula. But there's some spooky intrigue still to be wrung from this rookie series.

Smartphone can help you save

South Florida Sun-Sentinel

Your wallet is calling: It wants you to save. Why not use your smartphone and put savings on speed dial with top-rated shopping apps, mobile coupons and social-networking sites that can get you freebies and discounts. With the press of a button, watch the dollars add up while dining, drinking and playing. Here are a few examples of how to put your expensive smartphone to work for you.

THE COUPONS APP

This free app, available for iPhone and Android, uses ZIP codes, GPS and other technology to deliver a long list of local and national retail coupons and free goods and services at stores and restaurants. Download the app, click the deal you like, save it and show it at the register or restaurant to save. Visit thecouponsapp.com.

SHOPKICK

The free Shopkick app lets you earn points, called kicks, toward gift cards each time you visit a participating store. Once the app loads, points are awarded automatically when you enter a participating store. Users can open the app upon arrival at some malls, as well as Macy's, Target, Crate & Barrel, Sports Authority and Best Buy stores. Get more information at shopkick.com.

MOBILE COUPONS

For those who don't like clipping coupons or printing them off websites, there are text alerts. Retailers such as Old Navy, Toys 'R' Us, Macy's and Kohl's offer mobile coupons you show on your phone at checkout. The coupons arrive via text alert and offer savings of $1 or more on grocery items, clothes and cosmetics. The cashier scans them directly off the phone.

FOUR SQUARE

Foursquare, a free application for iPhone, Android and BlackBerry, lets you easily find specials and friends when you check in at stores and restaurants, or anywhere you go. The app has 750,000 participating merchants and offers high-value discounts and deals in partnership with American Express. The more you check in, the more you get. Users also leave helpful tips and reviews. Join at foursquare.com.

FACEBOOK CHECK-IN DEALS

Find Facebook's "Check In" button next to "Status" and "Photos." You must activate "Location Services" for Facebook in your phone's settings menu. Then, check in at a business using the Facebook app for iPhone, Android and Windows Phone 7 phones to see offers.

PS3 Game

Journey

PlayStation 3

Next time Roger Ebert says something about games not being art, someone should sit him in front of a PS3 to play "Journey."

This downloadable title, which involves guiding a nameless robed figure to a pyramid in the desert, thumbs its nose at almost every existing convention of modern video games—things such as narrative, character and action—and instead uses a minimalist approach to design and graphics to create a truly transcendent experience. The game is very short at about two hours, but "Journey" is a classic case of quality over quantity.

THREE TO PLAY

BY RYAN SMITH | FOR REDEYE

Unit 13

PS Vita

On one hand, "Unit 13" is one of the best military shooters to ever appear on a handheld system, if not the best.

On the other hand, that's not saying a whole lot. Zipper Interactive made a wise decision and opted for a game that feels like "Call of Duty" combined with "Angry Birds," using short, bite-size missions that award you stars based on your performance instead of long, story-driven levels. But while it controls well and cooperative play is nice, the enemy A.I. is wonky and the whole experience ends up feeling bland and inessential.

MLB 2K12

PlayStation 3,
Xbox 360, PC

Failure is inherent to the game of baseball; hitting a round ball with a round bat is no easy feat.

Maybe that's why the makers of "MLB 2K12" made the act of playing their video game so difficult, to reproduce the rigors of the sport they are simulating. But the problem with making the act of hitting a home run so profoundly difficult is, well, the game ends up being not much fun to play. "MLB 2K12" is a championship-worthy sim full of incredible lifelike detail, but as an accessible video game, it's stuck in the minor leagues.

RYAN SMITH IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

Carrie Underwood: Fashion model? New video has all the right looks

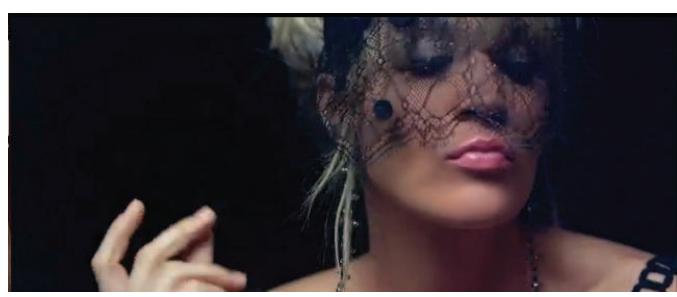

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Stand aside, Kelly Clarkson. Carrie Underwood is stepping up for the title of most fashionable "American Idol" winner. In her new video for "Good Girl," the blonde bombshell shows off not one, not two, but seven different outfits in an angel vs. devil scheme. Here's our sartorial take on Carrie's croon-worthy outfits—plus a few blink-and-you'll-miss-them details.

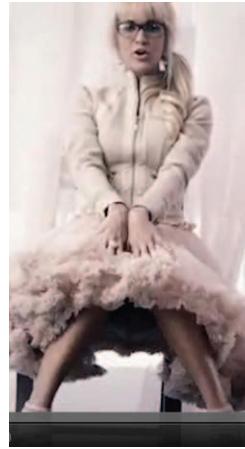

DAMORAN@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEDANA

1 Flapper tassels are a few seasons ago, but we can't argue with a giant bejeweled bow.

2 Why aren't veils more popular these days? We can't tell whether Carrie's in mourning or about to kick some butt. The super-long cross earrings are a clever touch.

3 Movies such as "She's All That" taught us that a hot girl is easily disguised by giant nerd glasses, but Carrie's sending us mixed signals with her manic pixie dream girl skirt. Paired with a leather jacket, it's perfect.

5 Little Red Riding Hood meets Snow White? When you're throwing open large doors, it's best to have very flowy hair and garments to set the mood. As Tim Gunn would say, Carrie on.

6 Oh hey, it's just me, locked in this basement wearing a flowy dress. Where'd I get this daisy I'm picking? Some twittering birds brought it to me, silly!

7 Lady Gaga called—she wants her giant shoulder pads back. Or is this jacket left over from Britney Spears' Circus tour. Either way, we dig the bangs.

8 We're still unsure how we feel about this whole "pantyhose that looks like your garters are showing" trend. Real garters are supposed to be a sexy accident—and by "accident" we mean "woman who knows exactly what she's doing"—so maybe this is just the next stage?

9 Presenting the most magical shoes in the history of the 21st century. We don't know how well they hold up to water, but Carrie can afford to hire someone to carry her over puddles in these bad boys.

CHECK, PLEASE

Sometimes it pays to follow celebrities on Twitter. Or, more accurately, it feeds. NFL receiver Chad Ochocinco tweeted Monday night that he would buy dinner for the first 200 people to show up at a Harlem restaurant, people.com reports. A half-hour later there was a line around the corner. Well, that's a creative way to keep the fans happy.

"I don't want to hang out with some guy I just like."

—Leighton Meester, to Marie Claire, on relationships. "I never had a boyfriend until I was 18," she said, according to cbsnews.com. "It's nice, I guess—when you like them. But it isn't the most important thing. I'm not sure I ever want to get married."

Questions for Q

Maggie Q will headline the "Nikita" contingent coming to the C2E2 conference April 13-15 at McCormick Place. Q plays the title character in the series, about a rogue spy who is out to stop the secret agency that turned her into a killer. During a panel April 14, Q and creator/executive producer Craig Silverstein will share insider secrets about what to expect in the final episodes of Season 2.
